Can People Have Meat and a Planet, Too?

People are seeking out “organic, natural” meat, but of course at what cost to the planet (and the pocketbook)? Fish as a source of protein is already pretty much a dead issue, given the pollution of the oceans, lakes, and streams, and the failure of the “manufacture” of fish which results in blobs of antibiotics wrapped around fish flesh.

Forget Saving the Planet: Being a Vegetarian Is Cheaper ...

Forget Saving the Planet: Being a Vegetarian Is Cheaper Than Eating Meat. According to the research, by eating a plant-based diet that uses olive oil—instead of lean animal protein—as a healthy source of fat, you could save nearly $750 a year compared with the average cost of a 2,000-calorie diet that follows the federal MyPlate nutrition...
